Time Limits

You must file an appeal within 30 days after the county sends you a notice of action. You have 90 days if you have a good reason for filing late. With Food Support you may appeal up to 90 days after getting the county's notice of action and do not have to show a good reason. The appeals office will send you more information about 2 or 3 weeks after you file your appeal.

Information About Continued Benefits

You can usually keep getting benefits while your appeal is going on.

If you already get benefits, you can usually keep getting the same amount until the state decides your appeal. But you must appeal right away. If you want your benefits to continue, you must appeal within 10 days after the county sends you a notice of action or before the date the action is to happen.

If you lose your appeal, you may have to pay back the extra benefits.

If you lose your appeal, the extra benefits you got during the appeal will be overpayments. Most of the time, you have to pay the overpayments back. The rules about overpayments are different in every program. Ask your worker about the rules for your program.

You can ask the county to stop your benefits during the appeal.

You may choose not to keep getting benefits. If you want to stop getting benefits during the appeal, check the box on the other side of this form. If you lose the appeal, your overpayments will be smaller. If you win the appeal, you can usually get the extra benefits owed to you. There are some exceptions. The extra benefits won't be paid if you no longer qualify for those benefits for a reason which has nothing to do with the appeal.

Reapply for benefits if your situation changes during the appeal.

You can file a new application for any program at any time. If your situation changes during the appeal, tell the county and ask to reapply right away. Sometimes this can make an overpayment smaller or get you more benefits. You might be able to get payments now even if the Human Services judge decides that the county was right before.
